About Tywardreath and the area

The pretty, historic Cornish village of Tywardreath, meaning 'The House on the Strand', lies in the heart of Daphne du Maurier country and features in her book of the same name. St Andrew's, the village church, is said to have the best peal of bells in the area, while the village has a lively community, centred round its excellent pubs and range of shops. There are several safe, sandy beaches close to the village, with a variety of watersports and leisure activities available. Par, a small, china clay port with a sandy beach is a twenty-minute walk from the village, home to a main line railway station.
